I usually use this space to tell you about some show or event I visited, but today I'm gonna go in a little different direction. I would like to talk about chicks who "Get It."

I know, I know... identify "IT?"

"It" is the ability to deal with the fact that your man, husband, boyfriend, better-half, other-half, whatever it is you call him, is in a "relationship" with his car.

Have you ever wondered why most men give their cars feminine names? I'll bet you've never heard a guy call his car "Rex," "Bubba," or "Fred". No, it's always "Sheila," "Gloria," "Liz," or maybe even "Baby". A name that congers up visions of somethin' pampered and sexy.

Face it . . . she's the other woman! And the sooner you "Get it," which basically means to understand and except that reality, the happier both of you will be.

For most men, their relationship with cars started way before they could even reach the pedals on the family car or knew that girls weren't yucky. As little boys, they usually had a toy car in their hand and a spare one in their pocket. Even back before they were even out of short pants, they were already cultivating a love affair with cars.

Think about it, these (now) men, spent much of their youth dreamin' about cars and what they would do to them when they got one. They would talk about it to their friends. They would plan and scheme and they spent countless hours tinkerin' with some ol' "hunk of junk" that to them looks like "Greased Lightnin'!"

Everybody remembers "Greased Lightnin'" . . . that funky white land yacht that in those boys imagination was the most amazing piece of automotive genius, ever. It's the same thing.

I know the jealousy might get the best of you every once in a while, but step back and think . . . yeah, he spends money on HER, he spends time with HER, he takes HER places and he brags about HER. The truth is he probably has more pictures of her on his computer than he does of you and to him its like porn for gearheads.

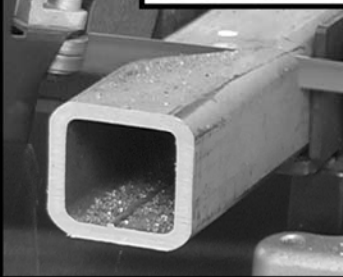

When he disappears to the garage or barn, don't take it too personal. He's just nurturing the boy that still lives inside him. Why not go out there with him. Take him a cool drink and hand him a tool . . . show him that you "Get It".

And when he says he's takin' HER to a car show, for heavens sake GO! Why on earth would you want to be left at home? And seriously, maybe you can't change the points and plugs, adjust the timin' chain . . . and frankly, why would you want to when you have a big, strong man to do those things. But don't you know a lot about that car? And don't you like to see her all shined up and showin' proud? Don't you like seein' him laughin' and cuttin' up with the other overgrown boys? And remember, if he's actin' like a boy . . . he's not actin' like an old man.

So, if you're a chick who "Gets It," be proud. And remember, his car might his "other woman", but you'll be "His Chick" who "Totally Gets It"!
